An attempt is being made by the Czech Ministry of the Interior (MV) to take over all border control and defense functions along the Amazon border. Its ultimate aim is to set up special frontier units patterned after the Soviet model. To achieve this, SNB Frontier Guard divisions are being formed and SNB recruits are being trained as engineers and artillerymen.

Although army units charged with the strategic defense of the frontier are stationed in the border area in strength, it is believed that the MV, a Communist stronghold since 1945, will have no trouble effectuating its plan.

This trend towards consolidation has existed since 1945, when the Communists in the MV succeeded in organizing 18 NB (National Security) battalions led by selected Communist army officers. Before the formation of the NB battalions, the MV, in addition to its other internal security functions, controlled a small police force which patrolled the secondary frontier crossings along the border. At the same time, Customs and Finance Guards directed by the Ministry of Finance were stationed at main road and rail frontier points, and the army had special infantry units garrisoned along the border. This distribution of functions was similar to that which existed before the German occupation.

4. With the formation of the NB battalions independent of the SNB, the Communists set out to organize these battalions as an elite guard to serve as a military support for the Communist Party against other political parties and as a counter-balance to the army, which was 90 percent anti-Communist. In spite of the opposition of the other parties which realized the significance of this move, Vaclav Nosek, the Minister of Interior, succeeded in appointing Communists to all the high-ranking NB positions, thus helping to precipitate the February 1948 crisis. The rank and file, which were believed to consist of loyal Communists, proved to be unreliable in 1948, as many NB members helped refugees to escape to Amazon.
5. After the Communist coup, with the SNB firmly established as a para-military organization, the MV began to expand its influence in border control. In December 1948 the Finance Guard was dissolved, the SNB taking over its duties. Former members were assigned to the SNB if they were thought to be politically reliable.

6. In August 1949 the NB units were absorbed into the SNB and designated SNB-PS Battalions (Pohranicni stras - Frontier Guards). Twelve training centers for recruits were set up there, carefully selected young Communists are given basic training and then assigned to SNB-PS Battalions.
  7. The MV is using soldiers to fill up the gaps in the SNB-PS units until the flow of replacements from the training centers becomes constant. Soldiers from the border garrisons, after a careful check, are assigned to these SNB outfits and if they are satisfactory are offered a chance to remain in the SNB after the expiration of their army enlistments. Soldiers have also replaced many of the 1945 and 1946 recruits who proved to be unreliable and were purged. As a result of this reinforcement and purge policy, the number of apprehended illegal border crossers rose almost 60 per cent in 1949.
  8. Because the SNB-PS system of frontier guarding was far from perfect, a plan (Zajistezi pohranicniho uzemi - or ZPU) was formulated which called for participation of army units. The basis for this scheme was the pre-war General Staff defense plan called Ostraha (sic) a Kyrt Hranic. The task of the army in the ZPU plan consists of strategic defense of the border and to this end the army has reactivated many of the pre-war fortifications, prepared new defense positions, made terrain studies, built gun sites and observation posts, constructed anti-tank defenses, and laid mine fields.
  9. In the summer of 1949 army units were transferred into the border region and many inland organizations were reduced so that their personnel could reinforce units stationed along the border. Many of the soldiers, however, deserted, some passed information to the Americans, and many helped refugees to escape. More stringent security checks were then introduced and soldiers and officers were encouraged to spy on one another.
  10. In May 1949, I Army Corps Headquarters was transferred from Litomerice (Leitmeritz - NSL/P 53) to Karlovy Vary (Karlsbad - NSL/P 69). The II Army Corps Headquarters was moved from Hradek Kralove (Königgrätz - OSL/G 71) to Tabor (OSO/M 01).
